

Kate WEINER

Director, Global Customs Regulatory Affairs Cargill

Kate Weiner is the Director of Global Customs Regulatory Affairs at Cargill, a Minnesota-based provider of food, agricultural, financial and industrial products and services to the world. Cargill's purpose is to nourish the world in a safe, responsible and sustainable way. In short, moving food and agriculture products from where it is produced to where it needs to be adding value along the way.

Kate has been active in the trade industry since 1995 getting started in the US Legislative, Executive and State Government before moving to the private sector in 2003. She began her private sector journey in the Wine Industry learning the complexity of wine supply chain throughout the world including composition requirements, labeling and standards of identity. She moved to Cargill in 2011 leading a team of professionals focusing on customs planning and strategy, governing customs compliance and managing customs controversy in North America. During her time at Cargill, she developed the practice of Customs Regulatory Affairs and then moved into the role of Global Director in 2020.

Kate holds an International Food Law Certification from Michigan State University as well as a B.A. in International Public Policy from James Madison College at Michigan State University. She lives in Minneapolis, Minnesota USA with her husband and two sons.