Item 4. Approaches and perspectives for advancing ESG performance in value chains, through traceability

Consumption and production drive the global economy and are essential for a post-COVID recovery. At the same time, consumption and production also impact on planetary health through the unsustainable use of natural resources and put people health and wellbeing at risk. In order to increase industry’s ability to manage value chains sustainably, both consumers and businesses must first be aware of the nature and magnitude of sustainability impact related to the production and consumption of goods traded across countries, and be able of make informed and responsible choices.

Improving the environmental, social and governance (ESG) traceability and transparency of value chains has therefore become a priority. Producing and exchanging relevant information in a standardized way supports common understanding, accessibility, clarity and comparison and fosters credible communication among business partners, with government authorities, and towards consumers and the general public.

In this session representatives from UN Member States, key industry actors and other stakeholders will discuss perspectives, available solutions and priorities for advancing ESG traceability and transparency of value chains in priority industries for the circular transition. Discussions will focus on the agri-food and fishery, garment and footwear, minerals, transport and e-waste management sectors.
Questions:

1. What policies and actions can governments, industry actors and other stakeholders put in place to advance ESG monitoring and reporting in value chains of priority industries for the circular transition?

2. What are the lessons learnt from the COVID-19 pandemic in terms of adapting and improving the ESG performance monitoring and reporting, and how to ensure that solutions in place can support small actors and vulnerable groups?

3. Which role can information exchange standards and advanced technologies (Blockchain, IoT, AI) play for ESG traceability and transparency along value chains?
