Background:

The current crises demonstrate that effective immediate response, recovery and sustainable solutions are enabled when power and resources are distributed both vertically and horizontally. Hence, it becomes imperative to foster enabling environments that facilitate multilevel governance and multistakeholder coordination.

VNRs, VSRs, and VLRs should not happen in a vacuum, they are powerful processes for promoting SDG performance, coordination, and policy development in a comprehensive manner. When connected, they act as catalysts for SDG localization and as promoters of healthy multilevel governance systems. This mutual nurturing enables a two-way dialogue where national reporting and priorities are informed by localized knowledge and experiences, and local actions are aligned with national sustainable development agendas. It promotes ownership and inclusivity in sustainable development processes.

Many national and local governments around the world are increasingly acknowledging the power that this connection holds, making strides to strengthen multilevel governance for SDG implementation. Moreover, when VLRs, VSRs and VNRs are produced at the same time, it enables governments to find synergies, making the reports richer and more cohesive, and improving the subsequent stages ranging from general coordination, planning new strategies and actions to strengthening the monitoring systems, and ensuring local communities and actors are present and with an active voice in the discussions at all levels.

This session aims to explore the concept of strengthening multilevel collaboration through the connection of VNRs, VSRs and VLRs. It will provide a platform for knowledge exchange among different levels of government as well as other stakeholders. The session will delve into the benefits, challenges, and best practices of integrating these review mechanisms, highlighting the potential for enhanced multilevel governance structures, inclusive decision-making, and localized solutions.
